ARTIST HIGHLIGHT

INDIA'S YOUNGEST ABSTRACT ARTIST: SHORYA MAHANOT

When you hear the phrase "abstract art by a six-year-old," the first image that might come to mind is magic marker scrawlings on the couch. But Shorya Mahanot's art is in a whole different league.

Pollock-like paint smatterings and bold, geometric forms cover the canvases of India's youngest abstract artist. The third-born child in the family of Mr. Aditya Singh Mahanot and Mrs. Pushpa Mahanot, Shorya created his first masterpiece at just three years old and had his first solo exhibition at Mumbai's Taj Mahal Palace just a few years later.

Shorya's paintings exude a visual sophistication and balance that belies his years. What's more, they seem to hold some degree of emotional complexity—or at least, a powerful juxtaposition of innocence and confidence.

Though he might paint like an adult, his parents are careful not to push him, or his art. According to the Mahanots, "We believe kids are going to be kids only once. To enable our children to sleep without care and live with joy is our purpose in life. Shorya enjoys playing with a brush & colours. Painting comes naturally to him. We merely encourage & enable him to pursue his joy."
